OCHSTADT PROVES GOOD LEADER FOR CENTRAL PLAYERS

Unknówn a Year Ago, But Produces Enough to Gain Captaincy for This Season.

EASTERN - WESTERN MEET

Third Battle of High School Championship Series Is to Be Played Tomorrow.

By BRYAN MORSE.

A year ago "Buck" Ochstadt had never been heard of except in a casual sort of way at Central High School. It required about forty minutes of play in the first championship football game in which the dark blue appeared to convince followers of the game that Ochstadt was to be ranked with the best players in the schools. His work was to be ranked with the best players in the schools. His work in succeeding games not only boosted his stock, but gave him the call for the captaincy, and this year he is rapidly coming into his own as a real leader.

Ochstadt is one of the smallest half-backs that ever wore a Central uniform. He is stocky enough, to be sure, but fails to measure up in stature to some of the big felows like King, Van Dyne, Hamilton, Magoffin, Tindall, Reuter and others who have made history for Central. What Ochstadt lacks in beef he makes up in speed and all-around ability, and he has succeeded in getting the necessary pep in the Central eleven to make it a serious contender for first honors.

It was noticeable in the game last Tussday that when Ochstadt went into the game the Central team took a decided brace. Ochstadt's strength, however, was not sufficient to gain a touchdown as his team was well spent and could not produce the punch in the last minutes of play.

As running mates Ochstadt has Selden and Long and when the trio once gets into action and recovers from injuries, Central is going to have a formidable combination. In justice to the cleven it might be said that the showing against Eastern was not a frue measure of the strength of the steam. The line work was commendable but the backfield had been shifted about so much that concerted action was not expected.

The third game of the high school championship series will find Eastern

A perusal of football results of the year reveals the fact that the Army and Navy Preps are plowing right slong from win to win. The team coached by Frank Newberry has won four games and lost none. The real test will come Saturday when the team meets the Tech eleven. A good game can be expected, as the Manual Trainers are prepared and will have their cripples ready for the fray.

Saturday Central and Business provide the scrap in the high school championship battle, and Business can be expected to show more than it did in the Tech game last Friday.

Western and the Georgetonw Preps mixed it up in last Saturday in a game at Georgetown Field, which reflected credit upon neither team. There was entirely too much rough work on both teams, but those who saw the contest were of the opinion that the Preps started the trouble. As was the case in most games of the kind the officials failed to use drastic measures early enough to check the roughness.

In contrast to that battle has been the performance in the high school games during the last two years. All of the teams have come through with clean records which have reflected credit upon coaches and followers.

Vivian gave an hysterical laugh and clutched Arthur by the arm as the auc-tioneer handed him the diamond from the sky. Then, as the purchaser and his little coterie of friends passed through the dispersing throngs, Vivian looked Homer Graydon in the face and deliberately turned her back upon him. deliberately turned her back upon him. Meanwhile, in her room at her modest hotel, Eather debated nervously with herself. The rank injustice done Luke, who had been railroaded to prison by the influence of Blair and Frank Durand, while Arthur failed to interfere, made her more bitter than she previously had been. For herself, she would never again intrude upon the man she loved, surrounded as he was by sycophants and parasites. But for Luke Lovell, grievously wronged, she would make one last appeal before she returned to Richmond and Hagar.

Arthur plunged wildly into lavish and present the gen fittingly to her on the occasion of the great Powell cestume ball.

After a great deal of thought Esther had decided that the best way to intercede for Luke would be to seek Arthur at the fete and make him promise to secure Luke's release. She had the assistance of Lawyer Smythe, who accompanied her in a taxicab to the scene of the festivities.

He was attired as a knight in armor, but insisted upon carrying his huge English umbrella in case it should rain and rust his glittering coat or mall. Esther was in the white robes of a vertal virgin. They entered the spacious, crowded hailway together.

The whole house was gay with lights, flowers, and palms. Everwhere the costumed merrymakers were dancing, and Esther sought the one quiet spot in all the bedlam of romp and revelry. This was a small upstairs reception coors. Here Smythe left her.

Suddenly, below, the music stopped. There was a fanfare of frumpets, and they rays of a calcium light were turned upon the great jurple velvet curtains at the end of the ballroom. These were drawn uside and there, between the narted draperies, sat the figure of a cavaller on a huge white horse with crimson trappings. Then the band crashed a march, and through the ballroom, to the center, advanced steed and fider.

a startled cry, for there, gazing full at

He stepped toward the girl as though he would explain everything. But she shrieked, "Choose between us!"

Arthur thrust the adventuress from to Esther the diamond necklace. But her eyes were riveted in horror upon
